The Orange County Sheriff's Department is investigating Zhang's death, but no arrests have been made. The investigation is ongoing, and many questions remain unanswered.

One of the biggest questions is why Zhang was surfing in an area that was known to have strong currents. Cohen said that Zhang was an experienced surfer and that she was aware of the dangers of the area. However, some experts have questioned whether Zhang should have been surfing in that area, given her level of experience.

Another question is whether Cohen could have done more to help Zhang. Cohen said that he tried to help Zhang, but that she was pulled under the water too quickly. However, some witnesses have said that Cohen did not do enough to help Zhang.

The investigation into Zhang's death is ongoing, and it is likely that many questions will remain unanswered. However, the tragedy of her death has raised important questions about the safety of surfing and the importance of being aware of the risks.

Surfing is a popular sport, but it can also be dangerous. According to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), there were 89 surfing-related deaths in the United States between 2000 and 2021.

One of the biggest dangers of surfing is rip currents. Rip currents are powerful currents that can pull swimmers and surfers away from the shore. Rip currents can be difficult to spot, and they can even occur in calm waters.

Other dangers of surfing include:

- Waves: Waves can be powerful and unpredictable. They can knock surfers off their boards and cause serious injuries.

- Rocks: Rocks can be hidden under the water, and they can cause serious injuries if surfers collide with them.
- Other surfers: Surfers can collide with each other, which can cause injuries.
- Marine life: Sharks, jellyfish, and other marine life can pose a threat to surfers.

There are several things you can do to stay safe when surfing, including:

- Surf in a safe area. Avoid surfing in areas that are known to have strong currents or waves.
- Be aware of your surroundings. Pay attention to the waves, the weather, and other surfers.
- Never surf alone. Always surf with a friend or a group of friends.
- Wear a leash. A leash will help you stay connected to your board if you fall off.
- Know your limits. Don't surf in waves that are too big or too powerful for you.

It is important to be aware of the risks of surfing before you go out in the water. By taking the necessary precautions, you can help reduce your risk of injury or death.

If you are unsure about whether or not it is safe to surf, always err on the side of caution. It is better to be safe than sorry.

The death of Tina Zhang is a tragedy. She was a talented surfer with a bright future. Her death has raised important questions about the safety of surfing and the importance of being aware of the risks.

We can learn from Tina Zhang's death by being more aware of the risks of surfing and by taking the necessary precautions to stay safe. We can also honor her memory by continuing to surf and by enjoying the ocean.
